bath design: TRANSITIONAL/MODERN

HEMINGWAY FINE HOMES

Forget a master bath. Here you'll find a master oasis, an expansive first-floor bathroom connected to an outside hot tub and private sundeck for a spa-like escape that upgrades the clients' house into their own private resort. This space prizes size, from the stately shower with its frameless glass panels to the 18-foot custom floating double vanity of solid teak with a slab countertop of Danby Olympian white honed marble. A skylight drenches the surroundings in sunlight from above, while tucked away in a private commode you'll find a separate urinal and electronic toilet. Motorized windows and solar shades separate the interior and exterior soaking tubs, allowing the clients to easily hop back and forth between hot and cool soaks as they transform bathing into a luxurious day at the spa.

HEMINGWAY FINE HOMES WITH CHRISTOPHER PAGLIARO ARCHITECTS

Why should the kids have all the fun? That was the thinking behind a young couple's home renovation that produced an outdoor entertaining space for children and adults, a home theater and an indoor/outdoor adult cabana and bar. The new state-of-the-art movie room seats eight, and blackout shades can be raised or lowered with the touch of a button. An adjacent whimsical concession stand has a popcorn maker and open shelving for any type of candy imaginable. In the bar, designer Amy Aidinis Hirsch clad the ceiling and walls with authentic reclaimed corral boards from Montana and covered the floor with supple leather laid in a herringbone pattern. Bronze-and-blackened-steel shelves display liquor, and the bar itself has a jaw-dropping chiseled-edge waterfall marble countertop that cascades down the front in a jagged diagonal line. This elegant play space emits an older classic feel, yet has all the elements of cutting-edge, transitional design.
